

LITMUS TEST

The first step toward confident & positive parenting.

Interpreted by:
Makrand Bhatt

YOUR SCORE

The following score indicates your “Primary” and “Secondary” parenting style.

STEP-BY-STEP GUIDE FOR PARENTS TO FOLLOW:

- Begin by observing your child’s behavior carefully.
Pay attention to how your child reacts in different situations at home, school, and social settings.
- Use the “Observation Matrix.”
Refer to the Observation Matrix provided in the report to record and understand your child’s behavior patterns.
- Complete the Child’s “Behavioral Indicator Questionnaire.”
Answer the questions honestly based on your observations. This will help in identifying your child’s unique style.
- Identify your child’s behavioral style.
Based on your responses and observations, determine which style best describes your child, a King, a Servant, an Elder, a Prince or a Joker.
- Review the remaining pages of the report.
Continue reading to understand recommendations and insights related to your child’s identified style.
- Adapt your parenting approach accordingly.
Use the guidance provided to make necessary changes in your current parenting style.
- Support your child’s growth and performance.
Apply these strategies consistently to help your child perform better and develop positively.

OBSERVATION MATRIX

For each situation, tick the dominant behaviour observed in your child.

Situation	King	Servant	Elder	Prince	Joker
1. Takes responsibility in group	☐	☐	☐	☐	☐
2. Reaction to failure	☐	☐	☐	☐	☐
3. Interaction with peers	☐	☐	☐	☐	☐
4. Learning new concept	☐	☐	☐	☐	☐
5. Response to teacher authority	☐	☐	☐	☐	☐
6. Behaviour during free time	☐	☐	☐	☐	☐
7. Communication style	☐	☐	☐	☐	☐
8. Motivation trigger	☐	☐	☐	☐	☐

CHILD'S BEHAVIOURAL INDICATOR

(Tick all that apply – patterns matter more than single ticks)

KING (Control-Oriented)

- ☐ Tries to lead or dominate situations
- ☐ Gives instructions to peers
- ☐ Gets frustrated when not in control
- ☐ Focused on results/winning
- ☐ Resists authority

SERVANT (Support-Oriented)

- ☐ Helps others without being asked
- ☐ Seeks approval or validation
- ☐ Avoids conflict
- ☐ Emotionally sensitive
- ☐ Adapts easily to group needs

ELDER (Wisdom-Oriented)

- ☐ Asks deep or reflective questions
- ☐ Thinks before responding
- ☐ Gives logical or thoughtful input
- ☐ Prefers meaningful conversations
- ☐ Observes before acting

PRINCE (Growth-Oriented)

- ☐ Takes initiative in tasks
- ☐ Shows leadership potential
- ☐ Focused on improvement
- ☐ Accepts feedback positively
- ☐ Participates actively in structured work

JOKER (Fun-Oriented)

- ☐ Uses humor frequently
- ☐ Gets bored with routine tasks
- ☐ Turns activities into games
- ☐ Distracts others or self
- ☐ Highly creative/imaginative

You as a parent behave like a boss or leader of the house.

You decide:

- What your child should study
- How they should study
- What activities they should do
- Even what career they should choose

The child mostly follows instructions, instead of making their own choices.

A KING Parent

Real-Life Example

Imagine this:

A child says, "I like drawing and want to try design."

Parent replies, "No. Science is better. You will become an engineer."

That's King style.

The parent is not asking – they are deciding.

What's Good About It

- Child gets discipline and direction
- Less confusion about what to do
- Clear goals are set

The Right Way to Use It

- Being a strong guide is fine.
- But full control is a problem.
- Instead of: "Do this because I said so"
- Try: "This is what I think is good. What do you think?"

What Can Go Wrong

- Child may feel pressured or controlled
- Stops thinking independently
- May lose interest or confidence
- Might follow orders, but not understand why

One-Line Summary

King style means:

Parent controls everything. Child follows.

But if you don't balance it,
you raise an obedient child, not a capable one.

SCORE:

In this style, the parent behaves like a support system, not a boss.

You don't control everything.

You understand, guide, and help your child.

- You listen to what your child wants
- You support their interests
- You help when needed
- But you let them take their own decisions.

What's Good About It

- Child becomes independent
- Learns to make decisions
- Builds confidence
- Develops real interest in learning

The Right Way to Use It

- Helping is good.
- But don't become over-supportive.
- Instead of: "Doing everything for the child"
- Try: "Try first. I'm here if you need help."

One-Line Summary

Servant style means:

Parent supports. Child decides.

But if you overdo it,,
you raise a comfortable child, not a strong one.

A SERVANT Parent

Real-Life Example

Imagine this:

A child says, "I like drawing and want to try design."

Parent replies, "Okay. Let's explore it. I'll help you find classes and see how far you can go."

That's Servant style.

The parent is not forcing – they are supporting.

What Can Go Wrong

- Too much freedom = child may get confused or directionless
- May avoid difficult things
- Can become dependent on emotional support

SCORE:

In this style, the parent behaves like a wise guide or mentor.

You don't control everything.

You don't just support blindly either.

You guide your child using your experience.

- You share what you've learned in life
- You give advice when needed
- You let the child think and decide
- You stay involved without forcing.

What's Good About It

- Child learns from real experience
- Develops thinking ability
- Builds trust with parents
- Makes better decisions over time

The Right Way to Use It

Guidance is good.

But don't turn it into lectures or control.

Instead of: "I've seen life. Just do what I say"

Say: "This is what I've learned. Now think and decide."

One-Line Summary

Elder style means:

Parent guides. Child learns and decides.

If done right,
you build a thinking child, not a dependent one.

An ELDER Parent

Real-Life Example

Imagine this:

A child says, "I like drawing. Should I choose design?"

Parent replies, "Design is a good field, but it needs patience and skill. Let me explain what it involves. Then you decide."

That's Elder style.

The parent is not controlling, not just agreeing - they are guiding with clarity.

What Can Go Wrong

- Parent may give too much advice
- Child may feel pressured to follow "experience"
- Can become slow in decision-making

SCORE:

In this style, the parent treats the child like someone being prepared for a big future.

You focus on:

- Giving the best education and opportunities
- Developing skills and talents
- Preparing the child for success

You invest time, money, and effort to help the child grow and achieve more.

What's Good About It

- Child gets high-quality exposure
- Skills develop faster
- Builds confidence and ambition
- Better chances of success

The Right Way to Use It

Providing opportunities is great.
But don't turn it into constant pressure.

Instead of: "We are investing so much, you must succeed"

Say: "We are giving you opportunities. Now enjoy the process and grow."

One-Line Summary

Prince style means:

Parent invests. Child grows.

If you overdo it,
you raise a pressured child, not a passionate one.

A PRINCE Parent

Real-Life Example

Imagine this:

A child says, "I like cricket."

Parent replies, "Great. Let's enroll you in a good academy, get a coach, and train properly."

That's Prince style.

The parent is not controlling, not just supporting – they are actively building the child's future.

What Can Go Wrong

- Too much pressure to perform
- Child may feel they must always prove themselves
- Can lose interest if pushed too hard
- May depend on external support instead of self-effort

SCORE:

In this style, the parent makes learning fun, light, and interesting.

You don't focus only on books and seriousness.

You use:

- Games
- Jokes
- Stories
- Creative activities

to help the child learn.

What's Good About It

- Child enjoys learning
- Builds creativity and imagination
- Reduces stress and fear
- Strong bonding between parent and child

The Right Way to Use It

Fun is good.

But don't remove structure and seriousness completely.

Instead of: Only making everything fun

Balance it with: "First complete your work, then we make it fun."

One-Line Summary

Joker style means:

Parent makes learning fun. Child enjoys learning.

If you overdo it,
you raise a happy child, but not a focused one.

A Joker Parent

Real-Life Example

Child is bored of studying math.

Parent says,

"Let's turn this into a game – if you solve 5 questions, you win!"

or

"Let's learn this through a story or example."

That's Joker style.

The parent is not forcing – they are making learning enjoyable.

What Can Go Wrong

- Child may not take studies seriously
- Can avoid discipline and routine
- May focus more on fun than results

SCORE:

Powered by:

+91 77 77 07 17 11 | hello@kareerstudio.com

<https://litmus.admitra.io>